2011-67 Change BIOL Major. Restrict independent study and transfer credits allowable. Approved unanimously. Approved catalog copy for the Major description:

The requirements for the major in Biological Sciences are designed to ensure a sound and broad background in biology, with opportunities to explore related fields. Biological Sciences majors must take BIOL 1107 and 1108, but majors interested primarily in botany may wish to take BIOL 1110 in addition or may substitute BIOL 1110 for BIOL 1108. Students wishing to complete this major must take at least 24 credits of 2000’s-level courses from EEB, MCB, and PNB. It is strongly recommended that at least four courses include laboratory or field work. In addition to laboratory work associated directly with courses, an Independent Study course in any of the three biology departments will provide majors with a means of gaining specific research experience. A maximum of 3 independent study credits from among EEB 3899, MCB 3899, MCB 3989, MCB 4989, and PNB 3299 may count toward the 24-credit requirement.

Courses chosen for the major must include at least one course or course sequence from each of the following three groups:
A. MCB 2000, 2210, 2410, 2413, 2610 or 3010
B. EEB 2244/W or EEB 2245/W
C. PNB 2250 or 2274-2275 (Note: PNB 2274-2275 must be taken in sequence to be counted towards the Biology major).

To satisfy the writing in the major and information literacy competency requirements, all students must pass at least one of the following courses: EEB 2244W, 2245W, 3209W, 3220W, 4230W, 4251W, 4253W, 4276W, 4896W, 5335W; MCB 3640W, 3841W, 4026W, 4997W; PNB 3263WQ, 4296W; or any W course approved for this major.
A maximum of eight 2000-level or above transfer credits in EEB, MCB, or PNB may count toward the major with approval of the respective department.

A minor in Biological Sciences is described in the Minors section. Majors are also offered in Ecology and Evolutionary Biology, Molecular and Cell Biology, Physiology and Neurobiology, and Structural Biology and Biophysics. These majors are described in separate sections in the Catalog.

2011-68 Ratify ENGL information literacy plan. Approved unanimously. No change in catalog required. Approved plan:

GEOC Program Plan for Information Literacy (for review by CC&C)

Information Literacy: the ability to know when there is a need for information, to be able to identify, locate, evaluate, and effectively use that information for the issue or problem at hand. (http://www.infolit.org/)

For English majors, Information Literacy will be the special focus of a range of the following upper-division courses, each of which emphasizes the collective nature of creating knowledge and the technological means of its transmission.

- Engl 3265W. Seminar in American Studies: An in-depth study of an event, historical period, or cultural production from an interdisciplinary perspective.
- Engl 4600W. Seminars in Literature: Intensive study of various limited topics, such as a particular literary theme, form, or movement, to be announced from semester to semester.
- Engl 4405W. Advanced Study: Drama: Intensive study of particular topics in dramatic literature.
- Engl 4601W. Advanced Study: Literary Criticism and Theory: Intensive study of particular topics in literary criticism and theory.
- Engl 4203W. Advanced Study: Ethnic Literature: Intensive study of particular topics in British or American literature written by ethnic writers.
- Engl 4301W. Advanced Study: Anglophone Literature: Intensive study of particular topics in the English literature of one or more regions, such as South Asia, Africa, or the Caribbean.

Each of the above twelve courses is a designated "capstone" experience, fulfilling both the Information Literacy and the Writing in the Major requirements for the English major. In capstone courses, English majors develop sophisticated reading, writing, and technological skills by consulting with professors, librarians, and sometimes fellow students. This work guides the student in compiling an annotated bibliography, surveying archival holdings when appropriate, analyzing research websites and databases, and attending library instruction sessions and workshops.

"The information-literate student determines the nature and extent of the information needed." In the capstone courses, the students are assigned to write a research paper of 15-20 pages or, where appropriate, a series of shorter research assignments, using critical methodologies specific to the course. Students learn to interrogate their chosen topic so as to generate the questions that need to be asked and answered in the course of their research. Creating annotated bibliographies give students an appreciation of the wide varieties of scholarly discussion. In developing their research products, students learn to identify and access information from primary texts and from secondary sources pertinent to literary analysis (for example, source-studies, interviews, scholarly databases, and archival papers).

- Standard Two

The information-literate student accesses needed information effectively and efficiently. In the capstone courses, English majors will be trained in advanced research methods in literary analysis, including the use of a variety of field-specific scholarly books and journals (in either print or electronic format), specialized internet search engines, and electronic databases (for example, the MLA Bibliography, LexisNexis Academic, ProQuest Historical Newspapers, and so forth). They will also attend library workshops and information sessions that explore the development and structure of scholarly information.

- Standard Three

The information-literate student evaluates information and its sources critically and incorporates selected information into his/her knowledge base and value system. In the capstone courses, all students are assigned secondary reading as well as the primary texts; they may also be expected to evaluate each other’s writing through such venues as WebCT. Exploring relevant secondary sources may require using ILL, archival sources, interviews, and so forth. English majors learn to trace information to its original source, establish which sources are most authoritative and suitable for scholarly discussion, and to identify political and cultural biases, logical fallacies, and inconsistencies in arguments. They learn how to adjust their own knowledge base and value systems to accommodate new information and concepts that they find persuasive, but also gain strength as critical thinkers by learning to draw on their own cognitive systems to articulate reasons for rejecting misinformation and conceptual error.

- Standard Four

The information-literate student, individually or as a member of a group, uses information effectively to accomplish a specific purpose. In the capstone courses, the English majors learn the research process by pursuing research projects as noted above (see Standard One). Throughout the research process, students will be aware of the needs and purposes of their audience. They learn to narrow the scope of their research topic, formulate a viable thesis, organize their argument, and in addressing a scholarly reader, produce a paper that contributes to a specific debate. As they evaluate previous scholarly work on their topic, they learn to discover how their understanding of and approach toward a literary text may differ from prevailing views.

- Standard Five

The information-literate student understands many of the economic, legal, and social issues surrounding the use of information, and accesses and uses information ethically and legally. The capstone courses emphasize rigorously ethical research; the principles of academic honesty are prominent in each course. Part of the research assignment is to learn the proper method of citation according to the MLA Style Manual or The Chicago Manual of Style. In this way, the English major learns that acknowledging earlier sources not only gives credit to another scholar but also furthers the critical debate.

To satisfy the general education requirement for information literacy in the major, students must pass at least one capstone course as listed above.

*The first sentence of each section is quoted from the document distributed by Association of College and Research Libraries: “Faculty Guidelines: Information Literacy Standards for Higher Education.”

III. Reports of Committees
None

IV. Old Business:

Concerning faculty governance, accreditation and the College C&C committee, the Chair reminded the committee of the document on accreditation, October 11th, 2006, by John Manning, to be found at: http://aurora.clas.uconn.edu/clasccc/minutes/ap06oc10.html

Further, the Chair made the committee aware of Dean Jeremy Teitelbaum’s appreciation of the work of the committee, and transmitted to the chair as quoted below. Discussion ensued.

Dean Teitelbaum indicates that the CLAS C&C does not fulfill an accreditation role. Its job is to act on behalf of the faculty of the college to review and approve changes to the curriculum. It’s a representative body. What is the difference between that and an “accrediting” body. Such a body applies a set of standards and decides if a program meets those standards, whereas we don’t have a set of formal standards for the curriculum. We have an evolving idea of it. The committee needs to be sensitive to its representative role. It's not a gatekeeper but a facilitator of the faculty's desires. The CLAS C&C can only represent its views by voting conducted in the departments in a fashion overseen by the representatives from the committee.

Concerning the developing Environmental Studies program of which the committee is aware, the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

“The Curricula and Courses Committee of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences supports the creation of an Environmental Studies Major, and offers to be as supportive as it can be in the creation of a viable and outstanding program consistent with a Research I University.”
This resolution was adopted in light Dean Teitelbaum’s appreciation of the Environmental Studies program transmitted to the chair as follows:

The Dean trusts the CLAS C&C will help encourage the Environmental Studies program in principle, and that the C&C will encourage continued work on the details of any concerns about the program. The idea that the Faculty of the Environmental Studies program is the Faculty of the whole College is one way to think of the program to keep it moving forward. Right now, the idea is to think about the Head of the Environmental Studies program as the Dean, if that helps the program along. Eventually a program director will be needed. The Dean is in full support of the proposed Environmental Studies Major and will provide the necessary budget for new courses proposed, for advising of students in the program, and other support necessary for the proper running of a program that includes a Major. For the near future the Environmental Science program probably should not be put under the same umbrella as the Environmental Studies program, but they may well be under the same umbrella in the future, such as in an Institute for the Environment. It is not yet clear to the Dean who will present new ENV Studies courses to the committee, but Sydney Plum (ENGL adjunct) is in charge of advocating for the program, and will be working with the new working group on the introductory course.

V. New Business:

A discussion took place about how to address the committee’s policies on online courses, either through changes to our forms, or other policies. Richard Rockwell and Roger Travis agreed to look into the matter further and report back to the committee at a future meeting.

VI. Adjournment

The meeting was adjourned at approximately 6:00 PM until October 25th, 2011 at 3:30 PM in the same place.
